Seller: Hmm, let me get back to you. Choice #1. Gabby: Okay, thank you. I'll wait to hear back from you.

With this answer, I have just passively accepted his answer. I lose all power in the situation and have to wait for this person to contact me. This is probably not the best way to respond. Here's another option: Choice #2 appropriate in a business setting. You could also use it with your friends. You could also say, "I'll let you know," which is a little less polite. People often use these phrases to procrastinate. It sometimes means they don't want to do what you're asking, or don't plan on doing it. I would say it can be used in both formal and causal speech.
