and perspectives of management and uses of the Adirondack forest draws upon this forest to frame the wider land-use debate taking place across the nation, especially in the Northwest. She explores the conflict that exists wherever logging occurs and the inevitable changing land use patterns that result.

Mixed wood forests contain both conifers (with needle-like or scale-like leaves) and hardwoods (deciduous trees that cope with the long harsh winters by dropping their leaves at the end of the growing season). Mixed wood forest on the Jenkins Mountain Trail at the Paul Smith's College VIC (12 August 2013).
