Twentieth Century Chinese Poetry

In the early twentieth century, The May Fourth Movement (1917-1921) launched an era where vernacular Chinese was for the first time accepted as a legitimate poetic voice. This was followed by an outpouring of verse written in 'plain speech' by people from all walks of life in contrast to the classical, elitist poetic forms of imperial China.

Tradition and Modernity in 20th Century Chinese Poetry

American critic and poet T. S. Eliot has called Pound "the inventor of Chinese poetry" for the twentieth century. Nevertheless, he sees Cathay: Translations, containing the much anthologized poem "The River-Merchant's Wife: A Letter," as more than intelligent literary archaeology of poems from eighth century China.
